

How the CIC Online Course Sharing Consortium Helps:

Launch and Revive Academic Programs

Expand the breadth and depth of your curricula

Course sharing helps colleges and universities leverage program and course offerings from other institutions, which allows them to focus more of their own resources on their greatest strengths, strategies for innovation, and essential points of differentiation.

Use online courses from the CIC network to affordably fill gaps, without immediately hiring new faculty. Building out an entirely in-person major poses certain challenges, but sharing online courses offers a low-risk option to create or re-imagine in-demand programs, without significant budget.

"We put together our version of a Computer Science major, a program based on feedback from expert faculty and regional employers — 25% of the degree is offered from Saint Leo's courses."

— Dr. Ann C. Fulop, Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs, Eureka College
